

A Wizard In the Kitchen

A story with a play-along soundtrack

Arranged for clarinet in Bb solo (excerpt)

The backing track and more Wizard products are available from hamelinmusic.com

A Wizard in the Kitchen* is an off-the-wall comedy with an accompanying music score. Using this book with its backing track, the instrumental soloist simply follows along with the narration and plays each of the musical cues after a count-in.

Learning to play a musical instrument can be a long and solitary undertaking but here in this easy-to-follow, fun interplay of words, images and music, the musician can imaginatively explore his or her skills by being part of an innovative project - a project where the soloist plays an intrinsic part in the unfolding of a colourful tale blending absurdity with suspense and high drama.

Notes

Sometimes the accompanying score plays without the soloist and sometimes the narration continues over the score but, in order to keep the instructions as simple as possible, any unnecessary information is omitted. Such details will become clear with familiarity. In the backing track the 'count-ins' are played by a woodblock and, in this book, any paused notes should be doubled in length. Please note that, when the soloist is playing Silver Breadcrumbs on page nine, the score will 'cut in' at the words golden light. The soloist should continue playing.

A Wizard in the Kitchen* takes approximately fifteen minutes to perform and is suitable for audiences of all ages. I sincerely hope that you enjoy playing it as much as I have enjoyed writing it!

Prologue

His music teacher was potty, as potty as a pot potato in a potter's potted meat sandwich and you cannot get much pottier than that can you? She lived in the village of Runnynose which was full of potty people.

There was Honor Shufflebottom who had never had to buy a pair of shoes in her whole life...

...and there was Willy Gotobed. A friend once told me that he had been sitting at the top of the stairs in his pyjamas for the last thirty years.

And then there was his music teacher, Ingredient Kitchen who... Well, you will meet her for yourself in a minute. Most people thought that she was very funny indeed but, to her student, there was something else about her too. Just a little something. A little something that he just could not quite put his finger on...

A Wizard in The Kitchen

Title Track

4 counts in

Ragtime ♩ = 132

The musical score is written in 4/4 time with a tempo of 132 beats per minute. It consists of four staves of music. The first staff begins with a mf dynamic. The second staff has a f dynamic. The third staff has a mf dynamic. The fourth staff ends with a molto rall. marking and a fermata over the final note. The score is written in treble clef with a key signature of one flat (Bb).

Ingredient Kitchen may have looked odd in her stripy socks and chef's hat but she also looked sad. "So, tell me, Herring, was that really your last lesson?" she asked, her voice bubbling like a pan of thick gloop on a stove. The reply could not have sounded more quiet and ordinary. "Yes, but my name's Harry, not Herring," said Harry, looking rather puzzled.

The unusual woman sat in silence at her piano, or panini as she liked to call it, and then stood up and walked over to a table. "Well, before you go," she whispered, "I have a little gift for you. I've composted you a piece of music."

“No thank you Mrs Kitchen,” Harry said politely, “but I won’t be playing again. I’ve only been having lessons ‘cause my mum and dad have been making me.”

He quickly gathered his things and walked over to the door. Mrs Kitchen looked horrified. “Isn’t your father pickling you up tonight dear?” she asked breathlessly. “Oh, please do be careful. It’s very foggy outside and, well, one hears such... fishy tails.”

“Oh please!” cried Harry. “Please Mrs Kitchen, you’re confusing me.” He remembered a game he had played on his Xbox a month before and said helpfully, “Do you think you might mean amulet? It’s like a thing that protects against evil.”

“Omelette, amulet, ambulance... who cares?” she boomed, “It’s feeling it that counts, but for your benefit...,” and then, with the same strange voice and with her bony finger pointing into the distance, proclaimed, “Beware! Beware ‘The Witch’s Amulet!’”

The young boy trotted into the night. “I’m sorry Mrs Kitchen but I don’t believe in witches,” he said.

He walked for about ten minutes and began to feel cold. “I wish I’d brought my torch,” he said to himself.

When he reached the main road there was a turning he did not recognise and, when he entered what he thought should have been the village, he seemed to be walking for ages with no sign of the old church, in fact, not much sign of anything at all and he reluctantly admitted to himself that he was lost.

He took the mobile out of his coat pocket and rang his father but nothing happened. There was no signal. So, he started walking a little faster than before and sometimes he stumbled over a wet clump of leaves or the bare branch of a tree would claw at his hair but what concerned him the most was that, in the fog, everything looked the same... (Turn the page quickly) and it seemed as if he were walking around in circles.

Steadily. Like a distant bugle ♩ = 128

The musical score is written in treble clef with a key signature of one flat (Bb) and a 3/4 time signature. The tempo is marked as 128. The score consists of six staves of music. The first staff begins with a dynamic marking of p and a measure rest. The second staff contains a sequence of notes: G4, F4, E4, D4, C4. The third staff contains a sequence of notes: B3, A3, G3, F3, E3. The fourth staff contains a sequence of notes: D3, C3, B2, A2, G2. The fifth staff contains a sequence of notes: F2, E2, D2, C2, B1. The sixth staff contains a sequence of notes: A1, G1, F1, E1, D1. The score includes dynamic markings of p, pp, and a crescendo line. The piece ends with a double bar line.

...music, the notes floating through the mist like a trail of silver breadcrumbs. (Pause) Realising how very cold and tired he was, he decided to find out where the music was coming from and he walked towards it through the grey, damp nothingness. He could not see anything for a while but only hear the sound of twigs snapping underfoot and the tinkling of a nearby stream but then he saw a golden light glowing from an ivy-framed window and a smoking chimney standing tall on a thatched cottage roof and Harry began to feel uneasy.

He began to picture similar houses he had seen before: houses in story books; houses inhabited by witches and, although he did not believe in them, he remembered his teacher's mysterious warning, "Beware 'The Witch's Amulet!'" He walked gingerly up to the garden gate, brushed the dead leaves off the house sign and read the words...

...‘Caramel Centre’...

Ragtime ♩ = 132

that he had walked in a circle and was back at the chocolate box home of Mrs Kitchen. He scampered up the garden path, knocked loudly on the wooden door and ran inside to safety.

“Mrs Kitchen, I’ve been lost in the fog for ages,” he wailed. “Please can I use your ‘phone so I can ask my dad to pick me up?” She replied with a tone which oozed treacle sponge and custard. “Well, of course dear. But one good turnip deserves another so, while you’re waiting for him, you can play the piece of music I’ve written for you. It’ll be such a trout.” This time, Harry did not see how he could refuse. “Oh, yes of course,” he exclaimed weakly.

He made his ‘phone call and then walked over to the table and picked up his present. (Get ready to play)

It was a short piece of hand-written music entitled ‘The Amulet’. “Oh, what a strange coincidence!” he remarked awkwardly and then he placed it on the music stand and began.
